Inspector Leyden seemed to consider the case one of the highest importance. To help out the ridiculous gravity of the situation. Assistant United States District-Attorney Ball was called in, and the case laid before him. Duffy swore most fervently that he had kicked a piece of watermelon about as big as his hand off the piank to avoid slipping on it and falling into the river.

After examining Duffy, who was somewhat rattled and who offered "to swear to anything, Yer Honner. I never did so before nor will again," Mr. Bail decided that there was no criminal intent on Duffy's part in kicking the melon into the river and that the evidence was not sufficient to make a case against him.

Mr. Ball so notified Commissioner Shields, who, with a very serious face, after becuring Duffy on the gravity of the offense if it had been fully proven, discharged the Tongshoreman.

Inspector Leyden said United States Supervisor Decidant had instructed him to rightly enforce the law about throwing refuse into the river. Commissioner Shields just as gravely again commended the Inspector for his zeal and devotion to duty.
